"Picking Harbor UCLA for fellowship was an easy decision for me because of my many prior positive experiences here. From rotating as a medical student to completing residency here, I have found being a part of this mission-driven community incredibly fulfilling. It is such a privilege to provide care to this population and while surrounded by amazing mentors and supportive staff. I am excited to continue my training here and contribute to this vibrant place that I have come to know and love."

"I'm so happy to have matched at Harbor-UCLA for my fellowship training. I had experience working at a county hospital in residency and enjoyed the complex pathology and the ability to provide care for a predominately underserved patient population, and knew I wanted to train in that kind of environment in fellowship as well. To me, the best things about Harbor are the autonomy and continuity we have -- we prep our own patients for the OR, perform their surgeries, and follow them postoperatively. There is also a strong commitment to teaching, with structured didactics and research curriculums, and we get to work closely with and help teach residents and medical students in clinic and the OR. In addition, we have a wonderful team including RNs and Urogyn NPs that help to ensure our clinics run smoothly. Most importantly, the faculty and staff at Harbor are all incredibly kind and foster a wonderful, supportive learning environment every day!"

Undergraduate: Brown University
Medical School: The Warren Alpert Medical School of Brown University
Residency: Brigham & Women's Hospital/Massachusetts General Hospital

"I chose Harbor UCLA for the patient population, and for the opportunity to conduct FPMRS research with the unique needs of underserved patients in mind. I've been delighted to find that everyone here shares an interest and commitment to providing high quality care to these communities. It makes Harbor truly a wonderful place to work!"
